

Farm Science Review

2024

Written by: Averi Stitzel

On September 18th of this year, Greenon FFA got the chance to attend Farm Science Review. Farm Science Review is an annual event that showcases the latest agricultural innovations and presents the best practices. The FSR is hosted by The Ohio State University College of Food, Agricultural, and Environmental Sciences at the Molly Caren Agricultural Center near London, Ohio. 66 Greenon FFA members chose to spend a day at Farm Science Review to learn about all things agriculture. There are so many different things to learn. I personally chose to visit the Ohio State Veterinary Booth. A group of members and I listened to a professor at Ohio State University who specialized in Animal Science. We were curious about attending OSU and what kind of classes there were that related to agriculture. Everywhere we went, we were greeted by friendly people who wanted to share their knowledge about agriculture and how it can better our world. There were livestock animals that were at Farm Science Review and many shops that FFA members had a chance to visit.

Greenon FFA members who were attending the District Soil Judging Contest had the chance to visit the Gwenne Conservation booth to further their experience with judging soils and prepare for their upcoming contest. Many have said that it was a great experience and that the process would help them in the future contests.